Interest Rates May Drop to Protect the Dollar

By Carl Gewirtz

PARIS - The cost of money is headed lower, according to leading analysts, who predict that interest rates in the United States, Germany and Japan will likely be cut in the weeks ahead.

"Coordinated interest-rate reductions are the only solution that both protects the dollar and stimulates flagging global growth," said Andres Drobny, an analyst at CS First Boston in London.

It is a conclusion that many analysts share following the watershed events of last week that saw the Federal Reserve Board lead a cohort of central banks to support the dollar at a time when it was not under attack.

"The Fed, and the Treasury behind it, have shown that they care," observed John Llewellyn at Lehman Brothers in London. The maneuver dispelled the notion that benign neglect of the dollar's international value was official policy. The timing of the intervention was significant, preceding hy one day the U.S. employment report for May showing a stunning loss of 101,000 non-farm jobs. Analysis said the report increased the likelihood of an imminent cut in U.S.

The data on jobs, coming after a series of reports indicating that growth is slow-ing sharply, "crased at a stroke fears of inflation and expectations of a strong rebound in activity later this year," said Malcolm Roberts, an analyst in London with Union Bank of Switzerland.

However, "weak economic data means a weak dollar," warned Ronald Leven at J. P. Morgan in New York. The only reason the dollar did not fall apart on the news, he added, was the fear of renewed intervention. Another reason for the dollar's relative huovancy was that currency speculators rarely attack before a weekend, especially a long one that will see much of continental Europe closed on Monday. But even intervention cannot prevent

Serb Chief Insists Dole Supports On a Pact Before Softer Clinton Hostage Talks Commitment

New York Times Sernce SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina -General Ratko Mladic, the commander of the Bosnian Serbs, has indicated that he will not give any information on an American pilot or 257 United Nations hostages until NATO renounces the use of air strikes in Bosnia.

At the same time, the Bosnian Serbs again increased pressure on Sarajevo on Sunday, killing four people and wounding eight with a shell fired into the Dohrinja section of town.

The shell landed close to the entrance to a tunnel under the airport that provides the Bosnian capital's only tenuous link with the outside world.

Major Myriam Souchaki, a UN spokeswoman, said Sunday that General Mladic was insisting he receive a guarantee that no further air strikes would take place before saying anything about the pilot or the release of the UN hostages held by the General Mladic made clear that until he has a meeting with the commander of United Nations forces in the former Yugoslavia, General Bertrand Janvier, and until he receives security guarantees, there will be no further hostage releases and no in-formation on the pilot," she said. The F-16 pilot, who was flying a routine

NATO monitoring mission over Bosnia when his plane was downed by a Serbian missile near the northern town of Banja Luka, has been missing since Frinay. Bosnian Serhian television has shown videotape footage of the wreckage of his plane, but NATO officials say the images are inconclusive. The U.S. defense secretary, William J. Perry, said there was no evidence that the tion had succeeded in ejecting, according to news agency accounts. UN military expens here were increasingly skeptical that the pilot was alive.

"If he were alive, we believe the Serbs would have shown him by now." an offi cial said.

General Mladic's demands, made in a telephone conversation late Saturday night with Brigadier Cees Nicolai, the chief of staif of UN forces in Bosnia, amounted to stern challenge to the American and Western European governments. They have said negotiation with the Bosnian Serhs is out of the question until all hostages are released.

'General Mladic was very clear: 'no' to everything until he has security guaran-tees," said Lieutenant Colonel Gary Coward, a UN spokesman.

WASHINGTON - Facing intense domestic pressures, U.S. officials moved Sunday to clarify their fluid policy on Bosnia, insisting that there is little chance American troops will be needed and reassuring Congress that it will be consulted at every

There was one important indication Sunday that the congressional hacklash against President Bill Clinton's comments on the role of U.S. troops would subside. Senator Boh Dole, the Republican leader in the Senate and a candidate for president, said that he supported the narrower interpretation of the role of U.S. troops that Mr. Clinton outlined Saturday.

"We do have a NATO obligation," he said. Overall, however, the senator says he favors withdrawal of the United Nations peacekeepers and lifting of the UN embargo on arms shipments to Bosnia.

General John M. Shalikashvili, chair-man of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said in a hroadcast interview from Vienna that Western defense ministers' decision Saturday to create a rapid-reaction force made it unlikely that European allies would need U.S. troops as an emergency extraction

"This is not an eventuality that stares us in the face right now," the general said.

Washington's United Nations ambassador, Madeleine K. Alhright, declared that the mere offer of emergency U.S. assistance to NATO made European governments more "comfortable" about taking robust action in Bosnia to assist United Nations peacekeepers.

Both officials sought to make it clear that the assistance of American ground forces would be offered only if peacekeepers were in an untenable situation, only if the North Atlantic Treaty Organization requested help, only if the troops remained under NATO command and only after consultation with Congress.

Their voices were meant to second the policy shift signalen Saturday by Mr. Clinton when he spoke of this far parrower mandate for U.S. forces than he had outlined just days earlier.

The U.S. policy on Bosnia has recently had three distinct hues. For months, the White House had barred troops in Bosnia except to monitor a peace agreement or to withdraw United Nations forces.

But after UN peacekeepers were seized as hostages last week, the president offered ground forces to help NATO in "reconfiguring and strengthening" existing forces in Bosnia. Amid fierce criticism of this policy, the president said Saturday that U.S. ground forces would assist NATO only in emergencies to "extract" endan-

While the sixth anniversary of the military crackdown passed without any visible sign of demonstration in the well-policed streets, the petition movement this year has created the outlines of a substantive political reform agenda that is attracting support among a greater number of Chinese intellectuals.

The most striking evidence of greater internal pressure for political reform was the petition on May 15 by 45 scientists and scholars led by Wang Ganchang, one of China's most senior physicists and designer of the country's first atomic bomb. For the first time, this petition attracted establishment figures who joined leading dissidents in calling for "the supervision of democracy" and tolerance for "indepen-dent public opinion" in China.

"That petition was very important," said Fang Lizhi, a leading Chinese dissi-dent exiled in 1990, "It shows the economy is not the whole story in today's China."

Or perhaps Mr. van Wolferen is right when he describes Japan as a neurotic country — it is one of his gentler criticisms — because the book's sales have benefited from Japan's longtime fascination with what foreigners are saying about it.

Wrapped Reichstag: A German Image?

Later this month, Christo - the man with one name, a stringy-haired Bulgarian emigre who wrapped the Pont Neuf in Paris, surrounded scruh islands off Miami and built a 25-mile-long nylon fabric fence in California - will drape the Reichstag in Berlin in huge sheets of aluminum-coated polypropylene, tied up with five miles of days, raising hope for its next incarnation as home to the Parliament of the reunited

Or will the once and future seat of government look smothered, hidden away just at the moment that Germany, set loose from its Cold War anchors, casts about for a new identity?

The government's decision to allow the Reichstag wrap is an inspiring display of self-confidence and even lightness in a society forever fretting about its xenophobia and its image.

But as he intends, Christo's wrap also reveals a more troubling aspect of Germany's struggle to redefine itself now that it is a more independent operator in a more complicated Europe: Without the comfort of communist-capitalist, East-West dichotomies, Germany is searching, thus far in vain, for some other way to instill civic pride in its populace.

It took the indefatigable artist 22 years to persuade the Bundestag, the lower house of the German Parliament, to approve his art project, called simply "Wrapped Reichstag." Through much of that period, the hulking, 100-year-old pile that backed onto the Berlin Wall was mostly empty, with a minor museum of German history in its basement.

Even so, wary West German legislators could not accept the idea that the building from which the Nazis had ruled, the symbol the Red Army had sacked and plundered, might be used for something as frivolous and downright freaky as a Christo project

But the artist was persistent, and more to the point, the times were changing. With the wall down, Cold War jitters receding. and the government of the united Germany moving from Bonn to Berlin, the Reichstag could once again become a symbol of

To Chancellor Helmut Kohl, that was even more reason to spurn Christo's annual appeals. He once said the Reichstag would never be defaced as long as he ran the country. But in 1993, Mr. Kohl was outvoted by legislators who argued that the project would somehow mark a new beginning for Germany. In Germany, affluence is the social glue.

Abortions a Major Threat to Kenya

Third of Maternal Deaths Blamed on Unsafe Terminations

By Donatella Lorch New York Times Service

AIROBI - When she found out that she was pregnant, Atieno, 18, followed her school friends' advice. She tried swallowing laundry detergent, herbal concoctions and various pills, but nothing she tried induced an abortion.

When she was six months pregnant, she could no longer hide her condition from the high school authorities, and they threatened to expel her. Miss Atieno, a tall, slim young woman who spoke on condition that her full name not be used, said she became desperate for an abortion. She gathered all the pills she could find and swallowed them: 12 aspirin, 6 painkillers and 4 capsules that she said a friend had given her.

Vicious labor pains started almost immediately and lasted for two days before an uncle took her to the emergency room at Kenyatta Hospital here. The baby was

Having a haby outside marriage is unacceptable in much of Kenyan society. where tribal customs are very strong, so like many teen-agers and young women here. Miss Atieno used methods to abort her pregnancy that could have been very dangerous.

Strict abortion laws and ignorance about contraception - and cultural and religious heliefs that prohibit its use force thousands of women and teenagers every year to turn to illegal and unsafe abortions. These abortions, often used as a means of birth control, are increasingly becoming a major medical, health and social problem in Kenya.

She now faces an uncertain and perhaps grim future. Her boarding school, run by Roman Catholic nuns, has refused to allow her to resume classes. Her parents are so angry that they do not want her to return home to western Kenya, she said during an interview in the hospital,

"Abortion is a hig problem in our country, especially for the urban adolescents," said Dr. James Macboki, an obstetrician and gynecologist at Kenyatta Hospital and a lecturer at the University of Nairobi. "We're talking about young people — girls and boys who by the age of 10, 12, 13 have had their first sexual contact.

"We are only seeing one aspect of the problem — unwanted pregnancies. Saving their lives is not the end of the story. Sexuality has a lot to do with culture. education, family units and economic TUDIES in Kenya show that the women who turn to abortion here are most likely to he teen-agers and women under age 25, said Dr. Koigi Kamau of Kenyatta's department of gynecology, Dr. Kamau is the director of the hospital's adolescent family planning counseling center, the only one of its kind in Kenya.

There is general knowledge about contraception among young Kenyan wom-en, but little practical information. Many schools are run hy religious orders, and the government opposes sex education in Family-planning efforts are aimed at married women, not the young unmarnied women who are the most at risk, doctors and nurses say. And once a young woman is pregnant, she often finds that she cannot turn to her family or the health care system for help. Studies show that as many as 10,000 teen-age girls a year drop out of school hecause of unwanted pregnancies and abortions. The only data available on abortions in Kenya are from public hospital admissions, which officials say is only the tip of the iceberg.

At Kenyatta Hospital, one of the largest public hospitals in sub-Saharan Africa with 2,000 beds, complications from induced and incomplete abortions account for about 50 percent of gynecological admissions - or about 20 patients a day and more than 6,000 a year, hospital officials say.

One-third of maternal deaths in Kenya are due to unsafe abortions, a study a nonprofit group indicates. World Health Organization figures indicate that the number worldwide is one in

As in other societies where abortion is illegal, the methods that desperate young women try are generally crude and dangerous, and the women are usually unwilling to tell hospital personnel if someone else was involved. Some women try overdoses of medication, and others try piercing the uterus with knitting needles or hangers.

The consequences are often infection. blood poisoning, chronic ill health or infertility, and death.

Dr. Khama Rogo, a gynecologist at the private Agha Khan Hospital, esti-mated in a paper published in 1993 that at least 187,500 pregnancies in Kenya ended in abortion each year. Of those, Dr. Rogo estimated, 75,000 were induced, as opposed to spontaneous abortions or miscarriages. But very little ac-curate information about abortion has been collected in Kenya.

Throughout the Third World, the use of abortion as a method of fertility regulation and control has terrible consequences for women's health, the WHO says. The agency estimates that 50 million abortions are performed annually throughout the world, the majority in developing countries.

HE way to resolve the problem is to liberalize the law and expand family services, including counseling for young people and for women who have had abortions, doctors and counselors say. In Kenya it is an uphill struggle.

Abortion is basically illegal unless the mother's life is at risk. The abortion law in Kenya stems from the colonial era and is based on the British legal system dur-ing the Victorian era. But while Britain has modified its laws, Kenya has not.

The law seems to be inconsistent with the government's commitment to control the country's population of 25 million, which without intervention could be expected to double in two decades.

The government has made a commitment to provide family planning services to all. Since 1984 the fertility rate — the average number of births to a woman during her lifetime - has dropped from 7.7 to 5.5. But the government has been reluctant to teach adolescents about contraception. This forces young women to seek abortion under clandestine circumstances, and it also contributes to the spread of AIDS.

Under the law, anyone who assists in an abortion or the killing of an unborn child is guilty of a felony and could be imprisoned for up to 14 years. Unless a doctor certifies that a pregnancy would threaten a woman's life, the only way a woman can legally ohtain an abortion is for two doctors to certify that she is mentally unstable and incapable of caring for a child.

At Nairobi's Kenyatta Hospital, a nurse conducting a class for women on miscarrriage or abortion-related problems.

BORTIONS under that provision are provided almost exclusively by private hospitals. where they cost several hundred dollars, as much as a year's salary for an average Kenyan.

Women's groups and most relief agencies have remained quiet on the issue of abortion, and because of a lack of government support, there are still only fledgling efforts at community involvement and awareness.

The Marie Stopes Center, a grassroots organization with 10 clinics in various locations in Kenya, is one of the few that provides counseling services and abortions under the mental health provision, in addition to family planning and medical care. The Kenyatta Hospital program teaches about 4,000 young women a year who are admitted after an abortion or miscarriage how to use contraception.

"In Kenya, access to contraception is limited," Dr. Kaman said. "There are too many barriers for these young women: social barriers, medical barriers, ignorance. Many people do not want to provide contraception to unmarried women. Catholicism may be a barrier, because it influences the policy of the govern-

Dr. Kamau's clinic is trying to provide these young women with choices.

Every day, the nurses go to the gynecology ward and hring the young women to a small classroom in the hospital. For more than an hour, a murse teaches an enthralled - and sometimes amused - audience about contraceptives, fertility and AIDS, working with charts and props.

The walls are plastered with posters: "Enjoy your youth — don't spoil it," and, "Your career first. Don't rush to be a parent."

The young women also receive individual and private counseling. The clinic provides their choice of contraceptive

Miss Atieno, who has been sexually active since she was 14, said the clinic had taught her to take responsibility for her actions. Before she became pregnant, she had heard about birth control pills and occasionally used condoms. Now she also wants a more effective contraceptive.

"I don't want to go through such an experience again," she said. "I will tell my girlfriends: If you want to have sex with anyone, be careful. Defend yourself first. The man should use a condom."

NEW YORK - What America needs, says Newt Gingrich, the speaker of the House, is a dismanting of the welfare state, with many of its functions turned over to private charities.
But from the Union Gospel
Mission of Seattle to the Forest Hills Community House in New York, charity leaders say they are already hard pressed to meet existing needs.

And they say the speaker's ideas are unworkable because his vision of what charities do and how they are financed is a page out of Norman Rockwell, a far cry from reality.

Although Mr. Gingrich has not offered details on how private charities could take over public functions, he has tossed ont some proposals: One calls for every church and synagogue in the United States to adopt a homeless person for six months, while another calls for all Americans to contribute three hours of voluntary service a

He argues that helping the truly needy requires nothing less than a transformation of American culture, shifting the responsibility from bureancrats to missionaries. "It requires the person who will sit there at 3 o'clock in the morning holding the hand of the person who is about to commit suicide," Mr. Gingrich said.

But the cornerstone of American charity today, his critics in charities say, is not built on neighbors caring for neighbors in tight little communities. Instead, it rests on a vast array of organizations — from neigh-borhood settlement houses and

Mr. Gingrich and others argue that if government reduced its role in helping the needy, private citizens would pick up the slack, but many experts dispute that contention.

"We don't know for sure that they are wrong," said Robert Putnam, a political scientist at Harvard University. "But it seems completely implausible that if you shut down the government that individuals and charity could compensate."

Most private charities depend heavily on government money, awarded through a combination of contracts and grants. The Forest Hills Community House, for example, draws $2.1 million of its $3 million budget, or 70 percent, from

Even big national charities rely on government aid. Last year, Catholic Charities USA, a network of about 1,400 social service agencies, received about $1.3 billion, or two-thirds of its revenues, from federal, state and local governments.

WASHINGTON — Two weeks after closing the section of Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the White House, administration officials are seeking an alternative to the ugly concrete barriers and harren two-block stretch of asphalt created in the rush to thwart car They have turned to a group of 10 prominent architects and urban planners, among others, who have suggested that the closed section of the street be converted to a pedestrian plaza with fountains, benchrestrooms, trees, raised flower beds and brick or light granite surfaces.

The future look of the president's front yard is such an important statement about the White House and its relationship with the American people, the architects and planners said, that administration officials should consider a national competition to design the plaza in the same way a plan for the Vietnam Veterans Memorial was chosen from 1,400 entries in 1982. "It's very important how they do this," said J. Max

The Incredible Shrinking Jury

3 More People May Be Dismissed From Simpson Panel

By Kenneth B. Noble New York Times Service

LOS ANGELES - As the 19th week of the O. J. Simpson murder trial ended, there were renewed concerns about the durability of the jury, with at least one and possibly three panel members facing dismessal, pources close to the case said.

Outside the presence of the jury, Judge Lance A. Ito met wyers from both sides late last week to discuss a continuing investigation of possible juror misconduct.

Afterward, the court spokeswoman said that "the court has not finished its review of jury

But a lawyer involved in the trial said Judge Ito was investigating three jurors.

One, a 28-year-old Hispanic woman from Pico Rivera, California is under investigation, the lawyer said, for passing a note to a former juror who was dismissed May 26 after the judge questioned her about working on a book.

The discharged juror, Francine Florio-Buten, 38, a telephone worker, has denied she was writing a book. Two other jurors, both black men, a 43-year-old marketing representative, known as No. 247, and a 54-year-old postal operations manager, No. 1489, are under investigation, the source said.

Speaking with reporters as he left the court, Johnnie L. Cochran Jr., Mr. Simpson's chief lawyer, said he expected the judge to issue a ruling on Mon-day about the fate of those jurors. He declined to give any further details. The removal of more jurors would almost certainly change the racial, sexual and perhaps philosophical composition of the panel.

In addition to the two black men and one Hispanie woman. there are six black women, two white women and one Hispanic man on the jury; the alternates consist of one black man, two black women, and one white woman.

Defense lawyers, pleased with a jury in which members of a minority dominate, have said they would consent to continue the trial if the number of jurors fell below 12. But prosecutors have sent contradictory signals as to what they would do in that

Gigi Gordon, a defense lawyer in Santa Monica, said: "I think it is quite common that if you go down to 10 or 11 jurors, it's a mistrial. But this case is extraordinary. You don't have jurors being released for the normal reasons: scheduling problems, illness and child

In this case, she said, the reasons include speaking about the case or failing to state informa-tion fully during the jury selection process.

"It's a Simpson phenomenon," she said. Changing the panel at this stage, Ms. Gordon added, could create even more problems, especially for Judge Ito. "What happens is that jurors form relationships," she said. "There could be another juror revolt. And Judge Ito could be viewed as the problem if he kicks out jurors who are well liked. There could be a divorce, jury-style."

The jury imbroglio largely overshadowed the start of testimony by Dr. Lakshmanan Sathyavagiswaran, the chief medical examiner for Los Angeles County, who is expected to provide graphic details — including pictures taken at the crime scene and the morgue of how the two people Mr. Simpson is accused of killing Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald L. Goldman, met their deaths.

The photographs were not shown during the session Fri-

As Mr. Sathyavagiswaran de-scribed how the bodies of the two victims had been weighed and measured, Mr. Simpson became unusually animated: For several minutes, he sat glowering and at other times he cleached his teeth, shifted his gaze to the ceiling and took deep gulps of air.

Mr. Kranz said it was common for the Library of Congress and other institutions to accept restrictions on papers rather than risk their destruction or damage in private hands.

Mr. Noll, who has called Jung "the most influential liar of the 20th century," contended that money was the real reason he has been denied access to the papers and why Princeton University Press, which published his prize-winning work, has canceled the new book

"The Jung family supports itself in part from royalties from Jung's

In a telephone interview from Zurich, Jung's son, Franz, called Mr.
Noll's writings "pure nonsense" and hung up on a reporter. The family refused further requests for comment.
The dispute began last year when Princeton University Press published

"The Jung Cult: Origins of a Charismatic Movement."

In the book, Mr. Noll accused Jung of having falsified dates in relation to the theory of the collective unconscious, which holds that people share images, buried deep in their unconscious, that influence their thought

In October, after the collective suicide and killing of dozens of members of the Solar Temple cult in Switzerties who have their own interests to protect.

The dispute also raises questions, he

About the same time, the Princeton press was preparing to publish "Mysteria: Jung and the Ancient Mysteries," a collection of Jung's writings that was edited by Mr. Noll and had an introduction written by him. Members of the Jung family demanded that the publisher withdraw The Jung Cult" from bookstores and stop publication of "Mysteria." Mr. Noll said that there were already 3,000 orders for "Mysteria" at the time and that it had been advertised in journals.

Mr. Lippincott, the director of Princeton University Press, said the publisher had sent several staff members to Zurich to try to calm the Jung family, but to no avail.

"We tried to persuade them that a university press does publish different positions on the same topic," Mr. Lippincott said.

The demand that "The Jung Cult" be withdrawn from bookstores, meanwhile, was rejected. But Mr. Noll said that Princeton University Press has delayed its second printing, an asserland, Mr. Noll wrote an article for the tion the publisher denied.

Neighbor Won't Send Its Water To Delhi

NEW DELHI - The Indian capital braced for a water crisis Sunday after the refusal of a neighboring state to resume

The chief minister of Haryana State, Bhajan Lal, said Sun-day that he would not send any more water to New Delhi. Mr. Lal said Haryana had a water shortage of its own and could not help the national capital, which has more than 10 million residents.

The rejection came after two days of bitter negotiations on the sharing of river water be-tween Mr. Lal, a member of the governing Congress (I) Party, and Delhi's city government, run by the opposition Bharatiya Janata Party.

"I will not compromise the interests of Haryana," Mr. Lal said, and added that he would resign if pressure was put on him to send water to the capital.

Mr. Lal's threat came as Delhi municipal authorities warned Sunday of rapidly shrinking water levels and said water service would be stopped if Haryana did not change its position within the next 24 hours.

The only river in the capital, the Yamuna, passes through Haryana before it reaches Delhi, where it is contaminated by industrial waste. In any case, the river is virtually dry because of a heat wave in northern India for the last 12 days.

The weather office reported nearly 45 degrees centigrade (107 degrees Fahrenheit) in the heat wave would continue for the better part of June.

The heat wave has sent temperatures in northern India to as high as 50 degrees centigrade (120 degrees Fahrenheit) several times during the last week.

EU countries have been deadlocked over the question for a year, holding up legislation on Union anthorization for novel" foods and ingredients.

But the latest text appears to have the backing of most of the governments in each camp — those wanting consumers to know every time a food has been genetically altered, and those wanting labels only on a case-by-case basis, the sources said.

The dispute involves foods that have been produced through biotechnology to have a longer shelf life, for example, or to better resist disease.

Stone Laid By Walesa For Katyn Memorial

The Associated Press

KATYN FOREST, Russia A somber trumpet echoed through the woods and mourners went as President Lech Walesa of Poland laid the cornerstone Sunday for a memorial to thousands of Polish officers massacred here by the Soviets in World War II.

"We want to promise all victims that, in the name of buman solidarity, we will remember them," Mr. Walesa said at the solemn memorial service by a flower-covered mass grave.

Stalin's secret police shot 4,400 Polisb officers bere in 1939 and dumped them into common graves in this forest near Smolensk.

Another 10,600 officers were shot to death in April and May of 1940 and buried in other

Katyn stands for the all these

Mr. Walesa said that telling the truth about the massacre here was a step toward reconciling Russia and Poland.

The officers were prisoners of war captured by the invading Soviet Army in 1939. After the Germans invaded the Soviet Union in 1941, they uncovered the remains in Katyn.

Moscow did not officially admit the massacre until 1990. During the postwar decades of Soviet-imposed Communist rule in Poland, the Kremlin insisted the the Germans were to blame, despite overwhelming evidence to the contrary.

President Boris N. Yeltsin of Russia sent a message to Mr. Walesa saying the truth would lead to better relations between Warsaw and Moscow.

"It is necessary to turn this tragic page of our joint history,"

He also noted that Stalin's henchmen had buried more than 10,000 other victims of many nationalities in the forest.

"We consider this forest a memorial for the victims of totalitarianism, where a monument to all the innocent victims should be created," he said.

Q&A: Forging a New Order

Acheson Biographer Draws Lessons From Another Era

James Chace, professor of international relations at Bard College in New York State and editor of the World Policy Journal at the New School for Social Research in New York City, is writing a biography of former Secretary of State Dean Acheson. He spoke about the post-war world's lessons with Lawrence Malkin of the International Herald Tribune.

Q. Since the fall of the Berlin Wall, some sort of new order is needed to replace the bipolar world of the last 50 years. You've spoken of a new concert of powers.

A. Fifty years ago, the United States was also confronted with a new world, but let's not forget there was no American grand strategy in place. Dean Acheson wrote, "Only slowly did it dawn upon us that the whole world structure and order that we bad inherited from the 19th century was gone, and that the struggle to replace it would be directed from two bitterly opposed and ideologically irreconciable power centers."

Eighteen months after the end of the war, the Truman administration had begun to erect the architecture of the postwar era. In addition to the Bretton Woods monetary regime, an international system based on the dollar as a world currency, the Truman doctrine, the Marshall Plan, and the lineaments of the Western alliance were all coming into being. And all this, let me remind you, happened after the Democratic Party had suffered its worst congressional defeat in 18 years. Like Bill Clinton, Harry Truman had to govern with a Republican Senate and an isolationist Republican House of Representatives very similar to the House today.

Q. What else does that era have to teach us now? A. The problem today is that since the collapse of the Berlin Wall and the old order. economic and security questions have been separated, both by the Europeans and us, and this is a grave mistake. Just as we both understood the need to link the economic recovery that began with the Marshall Plan to the beginnings of the Western alliance and NATO, we have to begin to look at a new system in terms of linking economics and Without any obvious external threat, it's much more complicated to see that necessary link now. This time the threat is generalized disorder on the security level, and economic disorder, too, through lack of government control over economic questions and especially the buge international flows in the fi-nancial markets.

On the security side, the United States cannot be the policeman of the world any more, so we have to work with others to prevent upheavals. And the financial and security systems must be connected, as they were in the postwar world, or they will not

Q. Which comes first, the chicken or the

A. You tell me. I think we bave to move in tandem, perhaps in slightly different rhythms but nevertheless on two parallel tracks. Secu-rity might be easier to tackle first because NATO already exists and the United States and Europe are already a part of it.

Q. And on the economic side?

A. We need to find some sort of transatlantic free trade system, and then link domestic economic policies, because this is the only way to move toward a global economy with stable currency values based on some form of global central bank and even global currency like the European ECU. If this seems optimistic, it also seems to me to be the only way you can deal with a new global economy, in which the central question for the moment is whether the financial market can be controlled. No great power can run a wholly national economy any more.

No one has yet come to grips with this. As long as countries insist on running wholly national economies to the degree that the United States, Japan, and even Germany are trying to do, you will not have cooperation. If the Japanese refuse, you would have to have a Euro-American system, and that would be very unfortunate.

Q. How would you link Japan to the security system? A. The United States is the pivot state. It would remain part of a new European security organization including Russia. In Asia, it also would remain a party to the mutual security treaty with Japan. If you have a real breakdown of economic relations with Japan. can anyone doubt that ultimately the mutual security treaty will also lapse? No power has ever provided for the security of another as its economy has grown ever more powerful; that is why economics and security must be linked

The Terror in Algeria

Just two years ago, an Algerian jour-nalist was killed in the first of a series of assassinations that has now reached 46. There has been no assault on a nation's press like it. This plague of terror began after the army took over, to preempt an Islamic party's imminent electoral victory, in 1992. The military government itself has a sorry record of suppressing independent journalism. But the murders seem mostly the work of the Islamic organizations fighting the government. especially the notorious Armed Islamic Group. Besides killing journalists, they have forced several hundred more people into exile and intimidated some, but far from all, of those who stay. There is a chilling abstractness to this aspect of the generalized slaughter that is taking place across Algeria. Some journalists are being killed, as they sometimes are in other countries, for the outspokenness or unpopularity of what they report or write. Those who fight us with the pen shall die by the sword. the Armed Islamic Group has said. But they also are being targeted simply as symbols of the secular state, the abolition of which is the fundamentalists' guiding goal.

Here lies the larger peril. The media in Algeria, as elsewhere, constitute the society's means of communication. To eliminate them is to atomize the society and isolate its members from each other. American journalists are fortunate enough to work in conditions where they are not called upon to pay for their calling with their lives. There must be immense respect for the personal courage and dedication of those facing a starkly different situation abroad, and a showing of professional solidarity across national lines.

Some 15 international media organizations have now joined in an appeal to halt the terror against Algerian journalists. All parties to the Algerian conflict official and opposition - are urged to cease media intimidation and censorship and to recognize the status of journalists as civilian noncombatants, to denounce forcefully attacks that do take place and to support the restoration of press freedom as an essential component of any solution to the Algerian crisis.

This is a program not just for rescuing an embanled journalistic corps but for helping a tom society rescue itself. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

To Remedy Discrimination

A confidential report prepared by administration officials should be enough to dissuade President Bill Clinton from joining the Republicans' gathering crusade against affirmative action.

It might even persuade him to tackle the Republicans head-on with a principled, public defense of a strategy that has demonstrably enlarged the opportunities for blacks, other minorities and women to move into the American mainstream.

The report, which has not been released, argues that with some exceptions the federal government's affirmative action programs are morally and constitutionally justified to overcome "manifest imbalances" in the workplace and in America's educational institutions,

The Reverend Jesse Jackson put the case for affirmative action more briskly when he called it a "conservative remedy to generations of unfair practices that favored white men.

The reality that affirmative action is a minimal, short-term remedy for enormous, protracted injustice is the message that Mr. Clinton must carry forward. He is likely to wait until the report is published before speaking out. Yet speak he must. In a year when every Republican presidential candidate needs a trademark angle, Governor Pete Wilson of California is trying to sell the public on the idea that affirmative action is an anti-white conspiracy. Mr. Clinton needs to recall the rather modest, and bipartisan, origins of the effort to get minorities and women into a fair race for education and jobs. In the late 1960s, President Lyndon Johnson's Justice Department and President Richard Nixon's Labor Department designed two consciously race-based strategies to break down ancient patterns of discrimination. History is instructive, too, when it comes to debunking the phony sense of injustice being urged on white male voters. In 1966, a New Orleans craft union with an all-white membership was required to seek out minorities and invite them to use its hiring hall — the only way that blacks could crack the job market. In 1970. Philadelphia contractors seeking city business were sold that their employees' racial makeup would have to approximate that of the local work force. In both cases, federal courts concluded that there was nothing wrong, morally and constitutionally, with these therapeutic efforts to redress years of negative exclusion with a new practice of affurmative inclusion. Since then, Congress and the courts have for the most part upheld the principles of affirmative action and its expanded application. Mr. Clinton can also talk about pracrical results. During the past two decades, a significant number of black families have been able to move up the job and income scale. Affirmative action is not the only reason for this, but it is surely an important one, More broadly, Mr. Clinton might ask, why in the world should white America fear the expansion of the black middle class? That is something to be welcomed by everyone.

According to an account in Wednesday's New York Times, the unfinished White House report gives Mr. Clinton room to address the concerns of white males. It says that race or sex cannot be the only criterion and that affirmative action programs must respect the rights of bystanders." like white men. It also expresses concern about federal programs that establish rigid quotas that in effect become an entitlement. On balance, though, the report reaffirms the value of affirmative action. In what was surely an unfortunate but perhaps revealing choice of words, one official connected with the report said that it was "an attempt by the president to discover and define what he believes."

It would be nice to think that Mr. Clinton had believed all along in affirmative action. But even if that was not the case, he now has a reason to embrace its cause and draw a clear moral line between himself and politicians who, in their avarice for votes, would end this measured. 30-year effort to undo two centuries of discrimination.

Focus on Civil Liberties

A change in the political atmosphere has overtaken the anti-terrorist legislation that President Bill Clinton sent to Congress in February. Then it appeared his proposals would be passed easily, though civil liberties groups rightly raised alarms about a section creating secret court proceedings in certain deportation cases and another authorizing the president to label groups as terrorists and prohibit them from raising funds. But the Oklahoma City bombing revealed a strong strain of antigovernment sentiment in the country, and now Republicans, not traditionally focused on the civil liberties involved here.

In mid-May, a bill came to the floor of the House that should have pleased law enforcement supporters: It contained $100 million in new money for counterterrorism in addition to $250 million for assistance to Oklahoma City and new security at federal buildings. But, in a new wrinkle. Republicans sought and received assurances before voting that no new or expanded powers were being granted to the Federal Bureau of Investigation or the Bureau of Alcohol. Tobacco and Firearms.

Last week Chairman Henry Hyde of the House Judiciary Comminee introduced his version of an anti-terrorism bill that improves on the president's proposal; it would at least allow aliens' lawyers to examine evidence being used by the gov-ernment in security-related deportation proceedings, and it would empower Concress to overtum presidential designations of organizations as terrorist.

Later, Republicans in the Senate, joined by a few Democrats, rejected an administration-supported proposal to amend the terrorism bill being considered there that would have expanded government authority to use emergency wiretaps.

The importance of protecting citizens' rights in these matters tends to be minimized when the targets of government action are alleged drug traffickers, pomographers and the like. But when larger numbers of citizens who consider themselves more mainstream believe, with reason or not, that they are threatened by government power, a linle more attention is paid.

If this phenomenon stimulates a greater sensitivity to the rights involved and a broader coalition for their protection, it is a welcome development.

Bosnia: In Lebanon, Some Sad but Useful Lessons

NEW YORK — Bosnia? I have a feeling that I've been to this play before. It was an almost identical ethnic conflict between Muslims and Christians and it was called Lebanon. It had a sad ending. As the United States tiptoes toward deploying troops in Bosnia, I offer these lessons from the 1982 U.S. Marine intervention in Beirut.

Lesson One: There is no such thing as a peacekeeper or neutral force in an ethnic conflict. The very meaning of an ethnic conflict is that a society has been torn asunder, every community has grabbed a slice and there is no neutral ground left. That is why shortly after the marines went to Beirut as part of a peacekeeping force to support the central government, they discovered that there was no center to support. Even the government was on one of the sides, and by supporting it the marines were drawn into the battle. That is why locals renamed the marines "the International Militia." That is why the marines in Beirut quickly went from trying to protect others to defending them-selves. That is why if the Uruted States plans to intervene in Bosnia, in any way, it had better decide whose side it By Thomas L. Friedman is on -- otherwise the locals will do it. Lesson Two: To try to extinguish an ethnic conflict when it is raging at full force is futile. When the call of the tribe beckons an ethnic group into battle, get out of the way. The tribal impulse for survival and revenge is like a political blowtorch. No amount of rational argument can tone it down. If you try to smother it with your own body, or army, it will burn a hole right through you.

What all these tribal conflicts have in common is that the participants never learn and never forget, but they do get tired. And what brought an end to the Lebanese civil war was that after 14 years of fighting, both the Christians and Muslims became exhausted.

But that exhaustion, while a necessary condition for quelling an ethnic conflict, is not a sufficient one - because the capacity of these ethnic groups to carry on their blood feuds at any price beggars the imagination. That is why you also need a clear winner and a clear loser. Both the Christians and the Muslims got tired in Lebanon, but the war only ended after the Muslims knocked out the Christians. Lesson Three: Once you bave two exhausted parties, with a clear winner and a loser, you still need an outside force that is cunning enough and brutal enough to manipulate the parties into a stable, longterm cease-fire. In the case of Lebanon, that was Syria's role. The Syrians made sure the Muslims won, but not so decisively that the Christians would be powerless. The Christians still have a role in Lebanese political life iust not as much as before. The Syrians were able to manipulate this redivision of the Lebanese pie (thereby ensuring themselves a slice) be-cause they had the staying power, and strategic interests, to stick around after the Americans, Israelis and Europeans had walked away. Lesson Four. There is always a great temptation when dealing with these conflicts to want to smash the party that seems to be engaged in the most grotesque violence. That is understandable. But if you are going to play on the other guy's field, you had better be playing by his rules. The game in Beirut and Bosnia is Everything Goes. They sboot at the Red Cross, they kidnap peacekeepers, they use car bombs, dog bombs and suicide bombs. The Geneva Convention rule book never made it out to Beirut or Bosnia. Unless you are ready to out-Serb the Serbs and out-thug the thugs, you had better stay home. Lesson Five: The best approach in dealing with such ethnic conflicts is usually: "Lift, lift and contain." Lift out the hapless foreign peacekeepers so that the parties can fight it out until there is a decisive winner and loser. By preventing that you are only prolonging the conflict Lift the arms embargo so that people determined to fight for their self-determination can do so until exhausted, victorious or defeated. And finally, contain the fighting so that it doesn't spread beyoud the ethnic cauldron.

That's how Lebanon ended. It would be so much more morally satisfying to do more, but in the case of Lebanon no foreign power was ready to pay the real price of doing more, and half measures only made things worse. So it is in Bosnia. The sooner we admit that, the sooner we "lift, lift and contain" there. the sooner the Bosnia war will reach its inevitable sad ending.

Before Things Get Worse, Try for a Hold-the-Nose Settlement

WASHINGTON — This has to be the prime moment to see what the diplomats might make of a Bosnia trembling on the brink of military escalation. There is, I think, at least a remote chance for what is at best a hold-the-nose settlement. But it does meet the crucial minimal standard of offering to the principal Bosnian victims of Serbian imperialism - the Muslim commurity and the Muslim-led government - a better deal than they can plausibly expect to get in any other way.

This may be one of those situations that had to get worse before it could get bener. Recently Bosnia got worse. Until then it could be argued that the United Nations had in NATO a powerful military lever to bring Bosnian Serbs to accept the settlement plan offered by the international Contact Group (America, Russia, Britain, France and Germany).

But then the United Nations made the mistake of prematurely testing its military option, by random air strikes. The Serbs answered by seizing UN peacekeepers as hostages, deflating not just the option of air strikes but the whole military option.

Keep in mind we are not talking here of whether the allies can inflict great damage - of course they can. We are talking of whether the allies can endure even modest but continuing casualties, and the evidence is they cannot. In short, the international bluff was called.

A flustered and defensive President Bill Clinton has responded in part by a series of military-type words and deeds, including hints of a limited U.S. comhat role. The closer the United States gets to anything smacking of putting American soldiers at risk, however, the less appealing the military option may look and the wider the opening for a political option. There is a political option. Its name is Slobodan Milosevic, president of Serbia. His reckless power-seeking makes him the single person most responsible for ex-Yugoslavia's agony; his record of broken promises and devious maneuvers has earned him a reputation as a snake.

But by policy and example, Serbia exercises more influence than any other country over its Bosnian Serbian kin, This makes Mr. Milosevic's cooperation indispensable if they are to be brought around.

It also makes his policy central not just to the relief of Bosnia but to the relief of Bill pickle. He is being pulled into a war he desperately wants to stay out of. The discredited Mr. Milosevic turns out to be better situated than anyone else to help him avoid it. Mr. Milosevic may need Mr. Clinton to spare his country further risk and deprivation. Mr. Clinton needs Mr. Milosevic to help get him out of a political jam.

A negotiation between the Contact Group and Mr. Milosevic is proceeding. For an end to economic sanctions and a return to prewar normality, be offers to isolate the Bosnian Serbs further and to repudiate their separatist political agenda. The talks are burdened by mutual distrust. They could easily collapse, increasing the sort of despair in which military choices become undeniable.

But they could also move forward. Then the question would

ul Lesson - A Miscalculation, Britain Says New UN Unit Called Proof of Serbs' Error

LONDON — The creation of a well-armed United Nations combat force that can strike quickly shows the Bosnian Serbs made a "massive miscalculation" when they took UN peacekeepers hostage, Britain's defense minister said Sunday.

So far as the particular position of the hostages is concerned, the Bosnian Serbs inevitably have put themselves in the firing line," Defense Secretary Malcolm Rifkind said in on BBC television.

"I think it's become very clear over the last week that the Bosnia Serbs made a very massive miscalculation in taking these hostages, not only incur-

Algerians To Execute Assassin of President

TUNIS - An Algerian court has sentenced to death an army officer for killing President Mo-hammed Boudiaf of Algeria three years ago. The defendant's lawvers who had walked out of the trial immediately appealed, a source close to the defense said.

Algerian state-run radio said that Algiers criminal court late on Saturday found Lemharek Boumaarafi, a 29-year-old army lieutenant, guilty of Mr. Boudiaf's murder in June 1992 and of plotting to overthrow the government

He was sentenced to death, normally done by firing squad, hnt given eight days to appeal. Many Algerians had hoped that the trial would have re-solved why Mr. Boudiaf was shot and killed in the eastern town of Annaha harely five months after he took power to try to resolve a crisis between Islamie fundamentalists and army-hacked authorities.

Speculation ranged from a killer acting for religious mo-tives to a carefully planned murder to eliminate a leader who was showing increasing independence from those who appointed him.

Algerian newspapers had earlier commented that the trial had done little to resolve speculation about why Mr. Boudiaf was killed.

"Except for a miracle, the trial is ending without great revo-lation." Le Soir d'Algerie said before the verdict. "It has not fulfilled its promise."

U.S. Firms Lose Taste for Bond Risk. By Carl Gewirtz

money markets. Although the hedge funds — large pools of private capital that take highly leveraged positions—are still in evidence in the foreign-exchange market, insiders report that another group of high flyers—the proprietary trading desks at U.S. securities houses, which operate for their own account - have massively scaled back their operations.

"The proprietary trading at banks is getting closed down," one U.S. banker observed. After the losses suffered last year, he said, senior management "has less appetite for risk-taking and is refocusing on traditional business."

He defined this as spread trading borrowing low-cost, short-term funds and investing in higher-yielding, longer-term assets - and traditional client business in areas such as corporate finance and mergers and acquisitions.

The impact of the securities houses' withdrawal from the world of speculation has been slow to be felt because the cutbacks take time, but bankers agreed that the amount of capital svailable for such

This is good news, particularly in the bond market. Bankers explain that this year's rally — which has seen 10-year yields fall back to levels last seen late in the winter of 1994 - lacks the speculative excesses experienced in the 1993 rally. But there is also a downside, and that is the withdrawal of the liquidity that speculators add to any market.

This lack is felt most acutely in the foreign-exchange market. A London-based trader commented: "There's no question that market-makers have smaller risk limits nowadays, and that means less confidence to make prices lest they get hit. That, in turn, means wider spreads between bid and asked prices, which adds to the volatility of prices.

Bond traders have been complaining about diminishing liquidity for months. Nevertheless, the outlook remains buoyant. Analysts are revising downward their estimates of likely yields in line with the downward revisions to the expected growth in the major economies this year.

Malcolm Roberts, an analyst in London for Union Bank of Switzerland, sees yields on 10-year U.S. government bonds, currently 5.99 percent, falling to 5.4 percent. He sees yields on German government paper headed to below 6 percent from their current level of 6.55 percent.

There was substantial activity in the Deutsche-mark sector of the international bond market last week, owing to the fact that the German unit offers issuers the best opportunity to swap fixed-rate obligations into very low-cost floating rate liabilities.

The difference between the cost to borrow three-month DM bonds and the interest income earned on 10-year DM paper is more than 2 percent. This compares with a mere 0.2 percent in dollars and zero in French francs.

Despite complaints about overall inflows into the Deutsche mark, Sweden's issue of 200 million DM of five-year notes, priced 10 yield 35 basis points over German government paper, was sold entirely to investors in Tokyo. More than half of a 1 billion DM, 10-year issue by Kreditanstalt für Wiederaufbau, or KfW, was sold in Japan, bankers reported.

Fed's New Tack: Don't Worry, Be Happy

By Keith Bradsher New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Even as figures indicating possible economic trouble ahead have piled up in recent weeks, Federal Reserve Board policymakers have shed their usual gloom and Clinton administration officials have been steadfastly optimistic. Their motivation is clear: The difference in the months ahead between a "soft landing" and a recession may well lie in preventing a sudden drop of business and consumer confidence.

If millions of Americans start worrying about the next paycheck and stop spending mon-ey. Fed officials would face the embarrassing task of lowering short-term interest rates just a few months after raising them, and President Bill Clinton could face an even tougher rethe Fed come as a growing number of economists now believe that the Fed may have raised interest rates too high over the last year to fight a threat of inflation that has

Fed officials acknowledge that their upbeat comments are partly aimed at soothing consumers and business executives, but they emphasize that the statements are based on a firm belief that the economy will continue growing.

The likely scenario is a period of, I would guess, a couple of quarters that look kind of rocky and then a restoration of something that looks like sustainable growth, say two-and-a-half per-cent," said Alan S. Blinder, the current vice chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

Janet L. Yellen, a Federal Reserve Board governor, was also optimistic, but cautiously so. "I'm not going to say I'm unconcerned with the risks only history will tell us for sure whether the Fed has overdone it." she said.

These and other comments by ing weeks and months show a similarly gloomy picture.

Although Fed officials de-clined to discuss specific indicators that might be important, the June unemployment report scheduled for public release July 7 seems likely to be one of them.

The Fed's top interest-rate committee is scheduled to meet again July 5 and 6, and to receive a private copy of the June unemployment report on the afternoon of July 6.

If the Fed does decide to cut short-term interest rates, it has one big sdvantage: inflation has barely risen this year, either because the Fed has been successful in its preemptive strike on inflation with higher interest rates last year or because the threat of inflation was never serious to begin with,

Investors in financial markets have shown little concern inflation became a visible threat about inflation and have driven was to break with the Fed's pass down interest rates for three- pattern of raising rates too late month notes to five-year bonds to stop inflation and then lowbelow the level of the overnight ering rates too late to stop a rates that the Fed controls.

"I think the Fed has over-done it," said Preston Martin, 8 central bank will be reductant to Treasury bond closed out the week at a yield of 6.54 percent, down from 6.61 percent at the beginning of Friday. The yield on the 30-year bond has fallen 0.80 percentage point since the beginning of May.

On Monday the Treasury will sell $14.2 billion each in threeand six-month bills. In trading on a when-issued basis Friday the three-month bills yielded 5.57 percent, and the six-month bills yielded 5.55 percent.

The lack of concern about inflation gives the Fed some freedom to cut rates soon. Yet any sharp reduction in interest rates could also hurt the value of the dollar in international currency markets, Just two days ago, the Fed joined with other central banks to buy dollars in these markets to support the U.S. currency.

Indeed, the point of raising interest rates last year before

Prodigy Is Making a Move To 'Silicon Alley,' N.Y.C.

By Jacques Steinberg

HITE PLAINS, New York — Prodigy Services Co., one of the leading U.S. on-line computer services, is relocating its corporate headquarters from White Plains to the emerging multimedia mecca of lower Manhattan

Prodigy's move, announced Friday, says much about the way business is conducted in the age of cyberspace. For all the efficiency of communicating by e-mail, modern and fax, even high-tech companies still put a premium on old-fashioned, face-to-face contact.

"Yes this world is about papeling anywhere because of "Yes, this world is about people working anywhere because of computers and connectivity. said Edward A. Bennett, the chief executive who joined Prodigy less than a month ago. "But to have a group of hard-working dedicated employees living and working in the creative community of New York - which important to our future."

Mr. Bennett said he hoped to spruce up Prodigy's on-line offerings by relocating the company's programmers, producers and marketing executives to lower Manhattan, where they can draw on the release of the release the talents of a growing subculture of graphic artists, writers, software designers and filmmakers.

struggling to keep pace with its two leading competitors; America Online Inc. and Compuserve Inc., a unit of H&R Block Inc. The on-line landscape is expected to become even more crowded later this year, when Microsoft Corp. and AT&T Corp. are scheduled to introduce similar services.

Of the 550 employees who work at Prodigy's leased headquarters in downtown White Plains, about half will be relocated to Manhattan by early 1996, Mr. Bennett said. The rest will continue to work

Mr. Bennett said he had no plans for further layoffs — the company let go nearly 400 employees in 1993 and 1994 — nor did he intend to move the company's mainframe computers from Yorktown, in the northern part of the county.

"I think his mission there is to remake Prodigy into a more youthoriented service," Peter Krasilovsky, an analyst with Arlen Communications, said of Mr. Bennett. "Today's Prodigy is more of a family service that might appeal to watchers of 'My Three Sons.' He'd like to capture more of the 'Beavis and Butt-head' crowd," Internet address: CyberScape@iht-lib.demon.co.uk

Beijing Warns U.S. On Trade Reviews

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches BEIJING - China welcomed on Sunday the renewal by the United States of its mostfavored-nation trading status, but warned that the time had now come for the annual review to be scrapped.

The MFN issue was "a product of the Cold War and has become a big problem in Sino-U.S. economic relations," Ou Huarong, a foreign trade ministry official, was quoted by the China Daily as saying.

The United States announced Friday that it would extend China's MFN status for another year. The move had been widely expected following President Bill Clinton's decision last May to break the link between human-rights concerns and trade with China.

Mr. Ou stressed that the uncertainty created by the annual review process could only damage the development of bilatertrade ties.

He criticized the U.S. Congress for showing "entrenched hostility to China."

Senior U.S. officials have said the only legal criteria af-fecting renewal of MFN now concerns freedom of emigration and that China continues to allow free emigration and open travel overseas. (AFP, Reuters)

NEW YORK - There was a time when cities on the hrink of bankrupicy did everything they could — cut johs, raise taxes, issue new bonds - to keep themselves afloat and pay off their dehts. But Orange County, California, is doing something different — and, many say. unthinkahle.

This county, one of the wealthiest in the nation, is seeking to use every legal option to wriggle out of its financial obligations. First, there was the stunning decision on Dec. 6 to file for bankruptcy protec-tion from those to whom it owed money after the county made a wrong-way bet on interest rates with billions in public dollars. Since then, the county has hired platoons of corporate bankruptcy lawyers to challenge in court the basic underpinnings of mu-nicipal finance — the moral and legal ohligation of a municipal borrower to pay its debts.

"When New York City had trouble, it was difficult, but it was a neat package," said Daniel N. Heimowitz, director of public finance for Moody's Investors Service Inc., the bond rating

In 1994 the Ottavi broccio, a white, full-fat cheese, became more famous than he could have imagined in the old days, winning first prize at the Bercy Festival in Paris.

Mr. Ottavi's sons, Charles and Vincennes, have taken the next step. Taking advantage of European Union programs to help small businesses, they borrowed 2 million French francs ($409,000) in 1988 to establish a

The Ottavi family has tripled the income of their business in six years. In 1989, they produced 400,000 liters, making 5 million francs before taxes. To-day, they produce 1.6 million liters and make 15 million francs before tax.

All may seem rosy now, but there has been an alarming recent development. Besnier SA, a multinational dairy company, has bought and renovated factories on Corsica.

When Besnier started making broccio cheese with cow's milk shipped from the mainland, which is a quarter of the price of Corsican milk, Ottavi Co. and the 19 other small cheese makers on the island were threat-

"We are trying to work it out at the moment so that Besniers do not sell to the wholesalers on the island so at least their market in Corsica can be secured,"

Charles Ottavi said his company had begun exporting cer-tain cheeses and that tourism had helped. "Many Germans and Belgians come to Corsica and develop a taste for cheese It is a totally natural, biological product and there is more of a demand for that now."

But that demand has brought its own set of problems. "Natural" means not pasteurized to EU hygiene regulations. Ottavi has tried to clean up the cheesemaking process "but it is almost impossible to have the same taste of our cheese if we are so strict in the making of it," Charles Ottavi said.

Mr. Campell of Paribas Capital Markets is pessimistic about Ottavi's future. "I think hygiene rules will not be relaxed. There have been too many concerns across Europe about bugs getting into the produce and caus-ing illness," he said.

STONE AND ASSESSED. ELINY DRECTOR

TOKYO - When 5:30 P.M. rolls around, Kyoko Kobayashi gets up from her desk at a major Japanese beverage company, says good-bye to her colleagues and spends the rest of the evening as she

It's nothing very remarkable. Except in Japan, where the tradition of lifetime employment means that even office workers ike Ms. Kobayashi have to hang around through the early evening, even if there's no real work to be done.

She can leave promptly because she is a temporary worker, dispatched to the company by an agency. Ms. Kobayashi, who is 32 and worked as a full-time employee until three years ago, said she preferred to work on six- and 12-month contracts.

I'm oot shackled by the company and after the contract expires I can leave if I'm unhappy," she said. "I'd rather have freedom than responsibility," she added.

Ms. Kobayashi is not alooe. About 300,000 Japanese now work on temporary 180 Settlem .

Temporary work is popular in Japan because in addition to freedom and flexibility, the pay is nearly the same, and sometimes better, than that for full-time employees. Office workers with word processing or English-language skills can earn more than 2,000 yen ($23.50) per hour. Computer programmers, who are in great demand, can pull down 800,000 yen per month.

But for many Japanese, particularly young women, temporary work is often the only choice.

With most Japanese concerns committed to providing employment for life, many companies hit hard by the recession and the rising yen have simply stopped hiring new graduates. Instead, they are turning to temporary workers to save

"Salaries for female office workers rise every year but companies refuse to give them more demanding work, so the cost of keeping them on the payroll just goes up," said Takayo Oda, an economist at the Sakura Institute of Research. "It's much noting that pension, insurance and other benefits are covered by the ageory dispatching the temporary workers.

Despite its fame as the land of lifetime employment, the use of contract workers is pothing new in Japan. Day laborers, office clerks and other low-level jobs have loog been filled by contract workers.

What is new is the growing use of such workers as part of a stated personnel strategy aimed at cutting costs and boosting dificiency.

"For most companies, the goal is simply to cut costs and survive the recession," said Sciichiro Yonekura, an associate professor at Hitotsubashi University's Institute of Business Research. "But about 30 percent are truly making strategic use of temporary staff. That's why there's more emphasis on job-specific expenise as is common in virtual corporations' in the West."

Programmers and customer-support personnel for the computer industry are in particular demand, especially by foreign companies such as Dell Computer Corp. and Compaq Computer Corp. that have

nese market

Workers with foreign-language skills also are wanted as more and more Japanese companies set up operations offsbore.

The business of dispatching temporary staff has grown into an industry in Japan worth oearly 1 trillion yen. Pasooa Group. the leading agency in Japan, has registered about 120,000 workers, one-quarter of whom are on jobs.

Makio Nagai, a senior Pasona executive. said sales from temporary staffing would grow by about 25 percent this year, from 95.3 billion last year, after having been flat the past three years. Other major agencies in Japan include Manpower Inc. of the United States and Adia SA, a Swiss-based company. Like other agencies, Pasona receives salaries on behalf of its contract workers. taking a 25 percent cut. After insurance and other costs are paid, Pasona is left with about 14 percent.

0.5 percent of the country's workforce, a ratio that is less than one-third that of the United States, Mr. Nagai said. Heavy-handed regulation and labormarket rigidities stand in the way of greater adaptation of temporary workers.

Unlike the United States, where temporary staffing agencies can dispatch any type of worker, companies in Japan are restricted to 16 categories. Notably absent from the list are doctors and lawyers, laborers, waiters and waitresses, dock workers and jobs involving money-handling.

Greater use of temporary staff also is hindered by Japan's ingrown employment practices. With most companies hiring people for life, employees have developed skills particular to the way their company does business. Accounting, personnel management and other functions are often done in ways that outsiders cannot easily step into.

"In the United States, the post comes first and the person fills it. In Japan, the person comes first," said Reiko Oshitani, a

States. The 300,000 Japanese working on short-term contracts represent less than director at Adia Central Ltd. "Jobs aren't well standardized and skills don't transfer Naturally, many middle-managers also remain wary of temporary workers, fearful that they will be squeezed out of their jobs.

There is also a growing body of research that indicates that while temporary workers can promote innovation and stimulate full-time workers, their use in sales and other functions can be counterproductive. Workers who contact clients directly are a key source of information for marketing. research and development, and customer

"The use of temporary workers will increase, but Japanese business and government must pay more attention to creating a system for fostering new industries and encouraging labor mobility," Mr. Yone-kura said.

Pierce and Becker Fall With the Rain

Courier Is Toppled, too, but Agassi and Muster Cruise On

By Christopher Clarey

PARIS - It was a weekend for dodging raindrops and anonymous qualifiers, for blowing proverbial smoke and insurmouptable leads.

But when the red dust finally cleared on Sunday, the essential points were these: Mary Pierce lost a match, and Boris Becker lost a match and an admirer.

Pierce, the No. 3 seed and the last French hope at the French Open, was outplayed in the fourth round by the 12th-seeded Iva Majoli, a forehandpounding, crowd-charming Croatian who likes to jump on stage during rock concerts.

"I'm very, very disappoint-ed," said Pierce, a finalist here last year and the winner of the year's first Grand Slam event, the Australian Open. "I really didn't expect to lose this early. but then again 1 didn't have much luck."

Pierce's luck started to run out when she caught a cold just before the tournament. On Sunday, she had to deal with pot only the sniffles but a strained right groin muscle that she said restricted her movement.

Even before her health problems in Paris, Pierce was clearly vulnerable. After dominating in Grand Slam quarterfinal rate after being told to start his against Kimiko Date, who beat out of action for more than a Lindsay Davenport. rate after being told to start his third-round match against the Romanian qualifier Adrian month and since returning to the tour, she had failed to reach a final in three tournaments. making too many unforced errors and often appearing edgy and irritable on court. Last month, Pierce had to save three match points to keep Majoli from knocking her out of the Italian Open in the quarterfinals. But on Sunday, Majoli marched onto a Center Court brimming with French fans and proceeded to smack the ball past their latest sporting hero with astonishing regularity.

Novotna Collapses Again, Blows 9 (9) Match Points

PARIS - Had there been another royal shoulder to cry on, Jana Novotna presumably would not have hesitated.

Less than two years after her memorable, third-set collapse against Steffi Graf in the Wimbledoo final, Novotna again lost her perve and a tennis match. And though it might be hard to believe, this time, in the third round of the French Open, the fall from impending grace was even more spectacular. Facing a 19-year-old American, Chanda Rubin, Novoma led by 5-0, 40-0 on Rubin's serve in Saturday's final set. It is the biggest lead possible in a tennis set, hut Novotna somehow managed to squander it, blowing nine match points before departing the tournament, 7-6 (10-8), 4-6, 8-6. As the momen turn inexorably shifted and her signature back-hand approach shot began falling into the net, Novotna's features were the portrait of distress. And Rubin, the daughter of a district court judge in Louisiana, wore a thin smile.

"I think just about everybody watched that (Wimbledon) final, and it was pretty painful to see." Rubin said of the 4-1 lead that evaporated against Graf. "I started thinking about that a little bit during the match and, of course, before the match, I just wanted to stay mentally tough and keep fighting, no matter what the score." From Novotna there was only awkward denial. She began experiencing leg cramps at 5-1 in the third set, she said, and she rejected all insinuations that she can't close out matches. "It is always easier to criticize and to say, You had this and you had that," she said. "But, of course, you have to also understand that this is tennis. This is happening to everybody, and we are only human beings."

In truth, the only other human being to experience a collapse equivalent to Novotna's at the French Championships was American Budge Patty, who, in 1958, lost a fourth-round match to Robert Haillet of France after leading 5-0, 40-0 in the fifth set. The closest equivalent here in the Open era came in 1993, when Gabriela Sahatini blew a 6-1, 5-1 lead and five match points in the quarterfinals against Mary Joe Fernandez. Fernandez was among those watching at Stade Roland Garros on Saturday.

"There must have been 25 girls upstairs screaming," said Lindsay Davenport. "Doesn't matter who you are playing against, 5-0, 40-love is unbelievable."

COVENTRY, England -An ailing Philip Walton sank a 4-foot birdie putt on the second playoff hole Sunday to win the English Open, outducking Colin Montgomerie, the defending champion.

After matching Montgomerie almost stroke-for-stroke through 18 holes, Walton set up with his winning shot with a superb approach at the 511-yard (467-meter), par-5 17th. Montgomerie missed his birdie chance from 25 feet, and the Irishman putted out the victory.

Walton was diagnosed with symptoms of pneumonia last

Tied for the overnight lead. Walton and Montgomerie shot final-round 70s on the par-72 Forest of Arden course to remain even at 274, 14-under-par.

• Greg Norman retained the lead Sunday morning in the day-late completion of thirdround play in the weather-troubled Memorial tournament, in Dublin, Ohio.

Norman held the lead when darkness halted play Saturday after a 4 hour, 50 minute storm

Norman parred in to complete a 5-under-par 67 and a 203 total, 13 under par on the rain-sodden course.

Ireland Scrapes Past Wales as All Blacks Smash Japan and Records

By Ian Thomsen International Herold Tribune

JOHANNESBURG - The rematch from hell sent Wales home with dreams of cutting through red tape to reshape its national rugby program, while Ireland looked for-ward to an unpromising World Cup quarterfinal against France next Ireland's 24-23 victory Sunday was a pleasant improvement over the last meeting three months ago in Cardiff, when both teams were winless in the Five Nations Championship probably one of the worst games of rugby I've seen," said Coach Alex Evans, who was hired by Wales after that defeat.

All that Wales can show from the last two World Cups are victories over Argentina, in 1991, and Japan, last weekend, and Evans headed back pleading with administrators to forget how they dominated the 1970s and instead unity their youth and national programs under one style of play.

The Irish, at least, can draw on more hope, having put three tries on New Zealand last weekend. They will enjoy studying the innumerable turnovers committed by the French in the overs committed by the French in the
its 22, and the newly substituted flanker Eddie Halvey — replacing

Culhane's 20 conversions shattered quarter does not represent a new and probably unbeatable trend.

Ireland almost finished the job in 14 minutes Sunday with two quick tries. It began with a penalty kicked two meters from goal by Eric El-wood, the try pushed through by prop Nick Popplewell. Not until De-nis McBride had run in the second try from a long throw-in — tackled ooce. Wales allowed him to get back up and continue on his way - did the Welsh stir awake. They were already down 14-0, and in that time Elwood had also missed two penalty kicks.

Ireland's first mistake was in refusing to step back for a lineout (seeing as Wales had been punished for the same thing moments earlier), and Adrian Davies's resulting drop-goal making it 14-6.

Neil Jeakins's second penalty (from three attempts) brought the Welsh within a try a half-hour from the end, but they could not exploit the sudden superiority of their pack.

over Scotland on Saturday, while hoping that their determined final appeared to be the cliented what appeared to be the cliented wha appeared to be the clinching try, converted yet again by Elwood, for 21-9 with 10 minutes to go.

The Welsh reacted hysterically. with cooverted tries from Jonathan Humphreys three minutes later and Hemi Taylor on the final play. Unfortunately for them, the push had been interrupted with finality by Elwood's kicking of Ireland's first penalty in five attempts.

In other matches, wire services reported:

New Zealand 145, Japan 17: 1n Bloemfontein, flyhalf Simon Culhane scored a record 45 points in his Cup debut and the All Blacks broke several other scoring marks in a match that

The All Blacks, who scored 21 tries as they wen their third straight in Pool C, will play Scotland in the quarterfinals.

"The players who didn't make the team for the first two games bave been very much part of our buildup," said the All Black coach, Laurie Cup match, their 21 easily breaking was perhaps a bit unfortunate that we played with such intensity."

Center Marc Ellis ran in six tries breaking the record of four in a World Cup match shared by several players - while Culhane scored a try and converted 20 of the 21 tries.

His 45 points are the most scored by a player in a test match, surpassing Scottish captain Gavin Hastings's 44 against Ivory Coast 10 days earlier.

Wings Jeff Wilson and Eric Rush each scored three tries, while lock Rohin Brooke and fullback Glen Osborne got two each. Center Alama Ieremia, props Richard Loe and Craig Dowd and flanker Paul Handerson also crossed the line.

The New Zealanders, World Cup winners in 1987, led the smaller Japanese players by 84-3 at halftime and easily surpassed the record for most points in a World Cup match, set by the Scots in their 89-0 victory over Ivory Coast at Rustenburg last week.

The All Blacks also bettered the record for the most tries in one World the previous mark of 12 conversions set by New Zealand's Grant Fox. England 44, Western Samoa 22: In Durban, Rory Underwood scored two tries and Jonathan Callard kicked for 21 points as England won pool B. The victory set up a quarterfinal match between England and defending champion Australia, the runner up in pool A, in a rematch of the 1991 final won hy the Wallabies, 12-6. Western Samoa meets South Africa, the pool A champion, just weeks after getting trounced 60-8 by the Springboks in a pre-Cup test. England led 21-0 at halftime as its forwards dominated, securing possession and allowing the backs room to move while pressuring the Samo-

Play opened up in the second half, with Underwood getting his second try and referee Patrick Robin of France awarded Eogland a penalty try when Samoa's Shem Tatupu went lard added three more penalties and penalty to lead 25-24.

Italy 31, Argentina 25: In East London, fly-half Diego Dominguez scored two minutes from time to give Italy a dramatic victory in the final Pool B match for both teams.

Italy trailed the Argentines, 25-24, after the Pumas' fly-half José Cilley had scored in the corner but came immediately back with the try by the Argentine-born Dominguez, who totaled 21 points for the match.

Both sides were winless going into their last Pool B match and had no chance of making the quarterfinals. The first half ended 12-12, with Dominguez kicking four penalties in four attempts for Italy while Argentioa scored two tries, including a pen-alty try awarded by referee Clayton Thomas of Wales, and one of two conversions by Cilley. Flank Ro-lando Martin scored the other try from a maul near the Italian line.

lo the second half, Italy scored tries by Paulo Vaccari and Mario Gerosa to gain a 12-point lead, but Argentina came back on tries by Maover the ruck ocar the try line. Cal- tias Corral and Cilley and a Cilley Wales' Hemi Taylor, collared by Paddy Johns, did break lose for a try, but not until too late.

France Turns the Tables on Scotland

ans into mistakes

PRETORIA - Gavin Hastings could not have chosen a more perfect oight. Before and bounced off the oear post. France scored on the final play to beat Scotland, 22-19, it would oot have been going too far to say that this had been his night ever since that afternoon in Paris. It had been almost too romantic for belief. Scotland and France were playing Saturday night for the right to gain a quarterfinal next weekend in the easiest draw in the Rugby World Cup. But there was more at work. France was desperate to seize back what Scotland had discovered by accident four months earlier. In the lavender dusk of an African evening, the match seemed to pick up where the one in Paris had left off, as if they were two halves of one long game. It might have been the longest, most beautiful winter of Hastings's life. He was 33, the oldest player on the field at the start, and on the first high ball he threw himself at Philippe Saint-André, spilling the in the person of wing Emile younger French captain like a N Tamack, whose speed had barrel of rainwater.

calling for his head, if meekly two steps late. (he was Gavin Hastings, after all): The team of which he was captain had failed to win in nine straight games. At the time, his last-minutes try to steal the match in Paris had seemed a brilliant fluke; or a gold retirement watch, more likely. As it turned out, the gray in his temples was enhancing. He announced his retirement to come at the end of this tournament, then scored more points younger players here. By halftime oo Saturday, leading by 13-3, Scotland had firm plans to plow oo to the semifinals, and who knows what then. Hastings had taken a hlind pass down the left alley and galloped 30 meters, sensa-tionally creating a try for Rob Wainwright. Hastings doesn't sprint, be gallops, but if he really was better in the old days, then his new works had a touch than any of the world's best,

That had shattered his oew invincibility. His supporters, most of the 39,000 bere, pulled oo sweaters as the secood balf wore oo and shivered nonetheless. Hastings would miss two difficult penalties, then make a pair to keep his team a full try ahead, knowing that a draw would put Scotland through by tiehreaker.

But Paris had not been about wishing away the precious minutes. The French were larger, stronger and faster, and their kicker, Thierry Lacroix, was perfect. They didn't know what they were lacking but they were desperate to find it. It appeared in the tiring eyes across from them. It was 19-15 with lots of injury time to go when Hastings lay still on the ground, face down, as the largest Frenchman got off of him. The stadium was quiet. He seemed to awake slowly. Three minutes later the last French wave crashed over threatened all match. Hastings A year ago people had been had to leap over him, arriving

Liechtenstein Brings Ireland Down a Peg in Soccer Qualifier

ESCHEN, Liechtenstein - Little Liechtenstein pulled off one of the biggest upsets in its history Saturday, holding Ireland to a 0-0 draw in a European Championship soccer qualifier.

The team of amateurs gained its first point in the tournament, in which it is playing for the first time. And, with an 0-1praying for the first time. And, with an 0-1-6 record, the tiny principality remained last in Group 6, two points behind Latvia and outsecred by 28-1 in seven matches.

But it dropped Ireland into second also in the group, as Portugal, which beat Lat-via by 3-2 later in the day, took over the lead. With two teams from the group qualifying for the finals, the Irish are not yet in danger, even if embarrassed.

Liechtenstein - its best result in 61 years of playing soccer was a 2-0 victory over China in 1982 — twice just missed scoring against Ireland. John Aldridge did get the ball into the net for the Irish in the 70th minute, but he was yellow-carded for

A Feminist in Pursuit of the Edible

By Molly O'Neill

NEW YORK — As she strolled through Central Park, Alix Kates Shulman, the feminist novelist and social activist, looked like any number of wellseasoned New Yorkers. The acceptance of a certain age seemed to soften the web of concern in the comers of her eyes. Her pace was still purposeful, even though these days Shulman tends to pursue the wild and the edible with the passion she once reserved for tossing off sexual conventions and gender

She kept pointing to and expounding on the park's edible greens. "Dock! Yellow dock!" she cried out. The leaves can be steamed with garlic, like spinach, but it has a delicious, citric taste. And it produces millions of little brown, wonderful seeds that I use baking muffins or banana bread."

To hear the voice that has for three decades provided a lyrical narrarive of the changing position of women in American society sounding like Euell Gibbons is to worry the fate of feminism. At least initially.

But ambling along in sensible black sneakers, Shulman, 62, tread this troubling notioo as carefully as she did the grass around clumps of dandelion greens, patches of purslane and miniature forests of wild chives in the park.

Shulmar said that in 1982, feminism was stagnating on the national agenda. Her first novel, "Memoirs of an Ex-Prom Queen" 11972), sounded a clarion call for feminism, but the politics of the 1980s, along with a tepid marriage and an empty nest, she said. "were making me feel irrelevant, on the road to obsolete.

And so in 1982 she went to the family's vacation shack for six months. Alone on a rocky jut of a Maine island, she tested the mettle of her tightly wrapped city soul against the vicissitudes of nature and embarked on a 10-year odyssey that she describes in "Drinking the Rain," a memoir that Farrar, Straus & Giroux published last month.

Without benefit of electricity or indoor plumbing — to say nothing of a deli — the cause-after-cause, deadline-after-deadline, die-hard feminist eked out meals from the woods and bay, lived by the tides rather than the clock, looking for dinner, she wrote, as well as for "who I am when the ride runs out."

On the island, slogging through slippery seaweed and prodding mud for mussels, snails and clams, she stopped analyzing the world long enough to understand it as she experienced it: a complicated collage whose components are as interdependent as they are paradoxical - male and female, rich and poor, privileged and oppressed, wild and tame, cooked and raw. Dinner is never far from Shulman's

She is not ashamed to say that she cooks every day.

Alix Kates Shulman: urban weeding.

"It's true that cooking became a symbol of women's oppression, so there's a certain paradox in glorifying it, a certain danger politically," she said. Besides, the cooking she talked about — sweating dandelion greens in garlic over a low, slow flame; chopping wild apples with a Zenlike precision to make chutney; joining land and sea by seasoning steamed clams with minced wild lovage - recalled spiritual practice more than bome economy.

"The Feminist Goes to Walden Pond." Her retreat to justices as commonplace."

oature, after all, occurred at a time when ecological concerns were becoming more intertwined with feminism and when reaction to technology was, among the middle class, making nature seem romantic again

"I used to see how everything is connected through the pervasiveness of the gender system," Shulman said, "After the island, I saw even deeper levels of connection: politics, taste, environment, waste, din-

"Drinking the Rain" also echoes books from other leaders of the second wave of feminism. Gloria Steinem's "Revolution Within" and Betty Friedan's 'The Fountain of Age' address the personal and political issues of aging.

"I thought I was writing of my own unique experience," said Shulman, who studied history and philosophy as a graduate student. "But wheo you interact with nature, one of the first things you learn is that no experience is unique, no event is isolated nothing happens by accident.'

Nature, she said, constantly weighs its own paradoxes. And so does she.

For the former full-time advocate, there is a paradox in the fact that she now lives as much of the year as possible in the crude shack in Maine, isolated from politics and ferment.

When the weather makes it impossible to live without heat, she returns to the loft in Chelsea that, for the last decade, she has shared with the high school sweetheart whom she met again after her second marriage dissolved. In New York, she remains acrive in the pro-choice movement as well as in a number of feminist organizations.

As a modern Persephone, she is at ease shunding between contemplativeness and activism. Still, she said, there are political dangers in writing a bool about returning to nature and the return to self, particularly at a time when rightist survivalists are championing nature.

As she strolled through Central Park, Shulman identified the paradoxes of her current world view as nimbly as she catalogued her island larder. Scotch lovage, goosetongue, sea rocket, rose hips, gold-enrod, sheep sorrel, charlock, bay leaves, wild lettuce and spinach, a panoply of edible seaweed. She takes a certain philosophic pleasure in the abiding, the renewing, the constantly changing.

Her prickly protectiveness of "the natural," "the environment" and the "old-fashioned" are the only hints that Shulman, the contemplative one at one with the world, might tug at Shulman, the advocate.

'I think of how James Baldwin described the paradoxes of reality,' she said, paraphrasing the writer: 'One has to hold in mind two ideas that seemed to be in opposition. Accepting life totally without rancor, accepting people as they are, but On one level, Shulman's book could be read as never, in one's own life accepting reality and in-
